SIGN IN

There are no passwords. A coach types the address the club added for them and gets a one-time link, good for fifteen minutes and usable once. An address that is not on the approved list cannot get in even with a valid link – that list is the access control.

INDOOR FACILITY SCHEDULER

SIGN IN

Use the email address the club admin added to the approved coach list.

EMAIL ADDRESS

EMAIL ME A SIGN-IN LINK

Email addresses that aren't on the approved list can't sign in. Ask the club admin to add you.

30-minute blocks · 1.5 hours max per request · one team per block

CHECK YOUR INBOX

The same answer whether or not the address is on the list, so this screen cannot be used to find out who is. A coach who is not on it is told to ask the club admin.

CHECK YOUR INBOX

If demo.rivera@jrchargersbaseball.com is on the approved list, a sign-in link is on its way. It works once and expires in 15 minutes.

Nothing arrived? Your email may not be on the approved coach list yet — ask the club admin to add it.

THE WEEK

The shared source of truth. Solid crimson is reserved, dashed over stripes is waiting on an approver, dashed outline is time a team has given back. The three read differently in black and white, not by colour alone. Underneath: what this team holds this week, and what is up for grabs.

UP FOR GRABS

Nothing released this week. When a team gives back time they aren't using, it shows up here first come, first served.

GIVING A BLOCK BACK

Most of the facility's time is assigned rather than requested. A team that will not use its slot gives it back here — right up to the start time, because late notice beats an empty building.

1.5 hours · 3 blocks of 30 minutes · in the past

Only the team holding this block, or a club admin, can release it.

PICKING ONE UP

Released time is first come, first served with no approval — it would otherwise go empty. Two coaches tapping at the same moment is a real race, so exactly one wins and the other is told plainly.

ASKING FOR TIME

Only start times that something fits into are offered, and for a chosen start only the lengths that fit before the next booking or closing time. The summary names the exact block before it is sent. The same rules run again on submit — the picker is a convenience, never the enforcement.

THE APPROVER'S QUEUE

One card per waiting request: the team, when, the coach and their note, and an explicit clash check. Approve is the solid button and Decline the outline – never two reds. Declining asks for a reason the coach will read.

APPROVALS
Nothing waiting. · 2 decided so far

No requests waiting on a decision. Approvers are emailed when one comes in, and can approve straight from that email.

Email me when a request comes in
On. Each request also carries a link that approves it in one click.TURN OFF

Approving from the email does exactly this. Whoever gets there first decides it – the other route then says so rather than deciding twice. See the calendar

APPROVED FROM THE EMAIL

Approving takes one click straight from the emailed link, with no sign-in — the difference between a decision made at the field and one that waits until somebody is at a laptop. The link approves one booking, once, and dies the moment that booking is decided by any route. Declining is deliberately not one-click: it asks for a reason the coach will read.

THE WEEK, ON A PHONE

Seven columns do not fit on a phone, so a day becomes a list. Free time is merged into runs rather than a column of half-hours, and each run is a tap straight into the request screen with the day and start already filled in.

ASKING, ON A PHONE

The same request screen, stacked. Start time and length are links rather than form controls, so the server knows exactly what is selected — which is also why the whole flow works with JavaScript switched off.
